

JEF's Forthcoming Event:

JEF-Chatham House Symposium

Post-Crisis Analysis: How Japan and Europe Responded, What Results to Expect

Admission Free

Friday, March 26, 2010 Tokyo, Japan

In the light of 2009's deep recession and the realization of the grave risks that some countries face if crises similar to this one recur, the symposium brings together high-level Japanese and European policy-makers, business leaders and practitioners to discuss the recent failure of economic growth models. Whether and how can these mistakes be corrected in future? What response may be expected and is there a role for risk mitigation policies beyond greater financial provisioning for emergencies? What needs to be done so that countries, such as Germany and Japan, dependent on global cyclical industries, or those, such as the United States and Britain, weighted towards financial services, can avoid devastating effects if global crises and cycles similar to this one recur? As restructuring and migration of global industries continue apace, it is important also to ask whether these trends might increase global instability if they overwhelm a country's ability to cope with the impact.
